We agree with our contemporary that it! will be very many years before the Japanese learn to do without the foreign middleman, and, furthermore, the manufacturers of Europe and America, who have also something to say in the matter, will naturally prefer to be represented in Japan by their own countrymen. The Japanese are at liberty to holeting sode penasut C., to convey men ashere send their representatives to Europe and America either as buvers or salesmen or in the dual capacity, and foreign manufacturers and dealers are equally at liberty to do their intermediate profits, and enabling us to supply business through foreign agents in Japan, as they will always continue to do to a greater or lesser extent. As there are French merchants established in England and English merchants established in France, so will it be in the case of Japan. In the development of the commerce of the country the Japanese will no doubt themselves do a good deal of the business that has hitherto been conducted for them by foreigners, but with the general growth of trade the latter to maintain their position. But should not artificially made from raisins and the fortunes of the muldleman decline it currents, as is generally the case with would not necessarily indicate a decline in foreign trade. Here in the Far East, where every one is now more or less dependent on commission business, we are somewhat inclined to magnify the importance of the middleman and to thuck that his interests are those which the Government should specially safeguard. It is this spirit which is responsible for the disgust and indignation with which the foreign communities in Japan regard treaty revision. But Imperial interests are not always necessarily identical with those of a class, and Imperial interests must take the first place. It is of more importance that the volume of trade should be increased 6th from Chiengson, on the Mekong. than that the middleman's interests should be conserved. It is for the middleman to adapt himself to the new conditions as they arise and make what he can out of them, but he cannot expect that things will be arranged specially for his benefit. We agree with the Japan Mail that the Japanese owe a debt of gratitude to the foreign commercial community; that it is through their efforts that Japan's commerce is what it is to day; that her navy has carned the command o the sea of Japan; that her railroads have been constructed; that new industries have and address with communications addressed to the started up on every side; and that, last but not least, she has been able to fight her greatest war with China unaided by a foreign loan. The plague began in May, and in that and the succeeding three months it reduced our attendance, especially in the girls school, by almost 50 per cent The school, however, was hever closed, and the work with the diminished numbers went on as usual. About the same time we had a change in the staff, two of the teachers leaving and their places being supplied by two from England.
